Goals of course:

CONTENT AND INTELLECTUAL GROWTH
• Gaining deeper understanding of the complex issues of race, culture, sexual orientation, and education through dispassionate intellectual inquiry and study (including doing assigned reading), combined with personal experiences of your classmates and yourself

• Encourage dispositions of mind involved in critical thinking, such as questioning assumptions, searching for alternative ways of looking at an issue, and looking for evidence

• Encouraging self-reflection, humility, and self-criticism: learning and applying critical thinking dispositions to one’s own thinking, especially concerning issues of race, culture, sexual orientation, and education. This includes being open to recognizing one’s own prejudices, stereotypes, and limitations of understanding—and striving to correct these limitations.

CLASSROOM PROCESS
• Learning skills of constructive listening and constructive personal and intellectual exchange, especially with regard to issues of the course that many people find difficult to talk about rationally and productively with others (particularly with those of different races, cultures, sexual orientations, religions, linguistic backgrounds, and so on). That is, learning to be attentive to and respectful of individual fellow students, and of the collective process of learning; learning to listen to others sympathetically and with an assumption that everyone is seriously engaged with the issues at hand; to take personal responsibility for participating in the collective enterprise of learning by making one’s own attempt to contribute.
• With respect to complex and emotionally charged topics, learning how to engage in productive conversations in which all participants feel that they have learned something, and in which all prepare themselves by doing assigned reading.

• Learning how to promote such interchanges among one’s students and colleagues.

PROFESSIONAL IDENTITY
• Encouraging the adopting of a proactive identity as an antiracist educator—and, more generally, being proactive as an educator committed to working toward social justice in whatever domains one chooses to operate.

• Learning to be a helpfully anti-injustice colleague—a cooperative and respectful colleague to others in your workplace and your profession, who works to find constructive ways to engage these colleagues in social justice issues.

• Encouraging becoming a caring and compassionate educator (or practitioner of any type)—believing in the capabilities and the worth of every student, and caring about the educational and personal well-being of every student.
